The most important precaution of all is to apply it thoroughly to the underside of every leaf, as soon as the young hoppers have hatch ed and are found to be numerous. It is possible also that it might prevent the eggs from batching, if applied earlier, although these are deposited beneath the skin of the leaf. The emulsion may be made by dissolving one-half pound of hard sosp in one gallon of hot water, and adding this boiling hot to two gallons of kerosepe. The mixture is then pumped through a force pump back into the pail until an emulsion is formed. Dilute fifteen times and it is ready for application."
